There is another interest attaching to this cave of Adullam, for Dean Stanley considers it may very probably have been the refuge of Samson in the cliff Etam, from which three thousand of his own countrymen were not considered too great a force to convey Mm down and deliver him as a peace offering into the hands of the Philistines. It was on this memorable occasion that the Spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him, and having found a new jaw-bone of an ass, he slew a thousand of his enemies, heaps upon heaps. Sad, alas! it was for him that in an evil hour he betrayed his trust, the Spirit of the Lord departed from him, and he was left for a time weak, like any other man. When, finally, his miraculous strength was restored, he perished with the many thousands of his foes. Such was the end of the man who departed from the living God! We need not be surprised at the frequent mention of caves in the Bible, for, like all other countries in which there are limestone formations, the whole of Palestine abounds with these natural excavations. The possible identification of the rock Etam with the cave of Adullam has caused a little interlude in our history. Let us return for a while to David, for we find...
